

I suffer from ocular migranes and sensitivity to lights such as from camera flashes and headlights. The new high intensity headlights make it much more difficult for me to drive at night. They cause much stronger and much longer-lasting blind spots on my eyes. This is very hazardous. So, while they may be improving the driver's ability (the driver with the HID lights), these headlights have an equally negative impact on the oncoming drivers' ability. My recommendation would be to disallow these lights from being used at all.
