

Gentlemen, with reference to the landing fees to be charged for prime time, it should be done and maybe this would force the airlines to reschedule some of their flights to an off peak hour.

When I travel my schedules are made to keep away from the high density traffic hours and yes at times the arrival could be inconvenient however this more than likely would save both me and the traveling public money in the long run.

At many airports where there are flights every few minutes the airlines could save money by eliminating the 'every 30 minutes service' or the hourly service and spread times out during the day or night.
The airlines do not need these many flights.

Thank you for reading my comments on this situation, and certainly hope many other people send in their feelings also.
