General Comment: I eat organic, unpasteurized leafy green vegetables that I purchase from the store.

I am adamantly against any rule or law that requires pasteurizing leafy green vegetables or any other vegetables or fruits before sale. I think the choice should be the consumers. If one consumer wishes to have their leafy greens pasteurized then the demand will create that market. I also believe that if a consumer, such as myself and the majority of my friends wants to purchase leafy greens without being pasteurized before sale I think we should have that right. There are a lot of nutrients that get destroyed in the pasteurization process.

Please vote against this rule and do not require that all leafy greens be pasteurized prior to sale.

Thank you for considering my opinion.
