To Administrator Stephen L. Johnson:

The Environmental Protection Agency should not suspend emissions reporting requirements for factory farms. The fact that you are even considering such a move shows that the EPA is more interested in protecting business interests from litigation than ordinary citizens from toxic gas emissions.

People living near these facilities have a right to know the levels of hazardous chemicals to which they are being exposed. The EPA should not exempt factory farms from this very basic requirement.

You are the person who is ultimately entrusted to help keep the people of this country safe! Please, please rethink your decisions, and base them on human safety, not financial gain!

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,
Martha Castillo
